CLEAN

Sparkling cleanliness, that reflects from the kitchen walls and furnishings, that gleams from the saucepans, that shines from the cooker—but then, of course, it is an electric cooker. Take the first step to real kitchen cleanliness now—change to electric cooking.

Don Pasquale

ACT I.

SCENE ONE: Don Pasquale, an elderly bachelor, is displeased with his nephew, Ernesto, because he wishes to marry Norina, a young widow of whom he disapproves, although he has never met her, and decides to disinherit the young man by getting married himself.

Being unaccustomed to the ways of women, he commissions his friend, Dr. Malateste, to find him a suitable bride. Malateste says he knows the very person, his own sister, and promises to present her to Pasquale the same morning.

SCENE TWO: Malateste, in order to help the young couple, connives with Norina that she shall impersonate the bride under the assumed name of "Sofronia," fresh from a convent and quite unsophisticated.

ACT II.

Ernesto, having been banished from Pasquale's house, is contemplating emigration, and in a melancholy song bids farewell to his hopes of marrying Norina.

Malateste introduces Pasquale to "Sofronia" and the old man is enchanted. A Notary is produced and the marriage arranged immediately.

No sooner is the contract signed, than "Sofronia" turns into a termigant. She demands luxuries unheard of in Don Pasquale's bachelor establishment, increases her domestic staff four-fold and in general drives the old man into a frenzy.

ACT III.

SCENE ONE: Don Pasquale is surrounded by bills accrued by his wife's extravagance while the servants play free with their new mistress's bounty. In addition, Pasquale discovers that "Sofronia" has acquired a lover (Ernesto) and sends for Malateste for advice.

SCENE TWO: "Sofronia" and Ernesto meet in the garden and are discovered by Pasquale. Malateste decides that the joke has gone on long enough and reveals that the marriage was a fake. With relief, Pasquale hands Norina over to Ernesto and wholeheartedly consents to their own marriage.

Here's good cause for pride...

IT'S A MATTER OF PRIDE that every year thousands more Irish families enjoy higher standards of living— thanks to Kosangas. Quicker, easier, better cooking, more hygiene, warmth and comfort can be brought to every Irish home — even in the remotest country districts, when Kosangas is installed.

Look for the yellow cylinder with the 'click on' regulator.

So easy to install!

Kosangas cooking, water heating, space heating or farm equipment is so easy to install, and is all available on easy terms. Because Kosangas offers the finest cookers, equipment, and gas installation, more and more people are switching to Kosangas—the best and cheapest bottled gas in Ireland. Your Kosangas Dealer will gladly arrange a free trial of a Kosangas cooker.

AEROBORD

The answer to 1000 insulation problems
— in the home and on the farm —

How wide is your range of insulation problems? It simply doesn't matter. Now, with Aerobord—Southern Chemicals give you the complete answer to all. Produced from foamed polystyrene, this highly efficient insulant positively teems with advantages. This is especially so on the farm, for when piggeries and hen-houses are insulated with Aerobord, the extra warmth and increased protection rapidly benefit well-being and growth—resulting in bigger profits. For the farmer himself, Aerobord fitted in his home ensures cosiness and comfort at all times

- A sheet 1" thick has the same insulating value as a concrete wall $3\frac{1}{2}$ ' thick or 6" of timber.
- It is not affected by water, weak acids, alkalis, or alcohol, etc.
- It can be sawn, nailed, glued, plastered, painted or wallpapered.
- It is light as a feather, yet rigid and strong.
